Jersey Fresh blues are healthy goals!

By

Joe Atchison III is the Assistant Secretary and Director of Marketing & Development for the New Jersey Department of Agriculture

June 5, 2026

New Jersey had a very interesting winter and spring. We had 90 degree days early and then again in April followed by two nights of below freezing temperatures. A few fruit crops were lost entirely to this freeze while others were impacted to a lesser degree. The great news is, New Jersey blueberry producers expect a robust crop of top-quality berries for this year. And we are happy to report that Jersey Fresh blueberries will be ready for your shelves starting mid-June into August.
